Case Study House 2B-001-Morris House

On the ground floor, you enter through a small yet surprisingly spacious hallway. The kitchen greets you first—bright and open with a sliding door, its sink turned toward the outside world. A modest WC tucks itself quietly beside it, unassuming, while a narrow storage room hides beneath the rising stairs, like a whispered secret the house keeps to itself.

Then the space opens: a living and dining room that stretches toward the back of the home, wide and open, filled with light. Two long sofas invite conversation or comfortable silence, and a dining table waits near the window—a place for quiet breakfasts or spirited dinners shared with family and friends.

Up the stairs, one bedroom looks to the rear, calm and generous with plenty of space for wardrobes and a desk, a retreat where the day can be set aside. Another faces the front, slightly smaller yet equally warm, a room that feels like a personal world of its own. Between them lies the bathroom, serving both bedrooms with quiet efficiency, while small storage spaces flank the staircase, keeping the home tidy and composed.

Much like its namesake the Morris is humble, charming, and thoughtfully designed—this house is a starter home for a young couple seeking their first family nest: small and functional, yet spacious enough for two adults and two children to live comfortably grow.
